Excerpt from The History of St. Martin s Church, Canterbury: A Monograph St. Martin s church is situated on a gently sloping hill, about a thousand yards due east of the Cathedral. To one looking from the elevated terrace which bounds its churchyard, the panorama is exceedingly picturesque and beautiful. In the distance rises a range of low wooded hills that almost encircle Canterbury, and the conspicuous building of Hales Place, now the Jesuits College; while beneath is spread in a hollow the city itself with its red-tiled roofs interspersed with patches of green, the Library and twin towers of St. Augustine s Abbey, and above all the massive Cathedral, with Becket s Crown in the foreground, and the central Bell Harry tower lifting out of the morning s mist its magnificent pinnacles and tracery.
