

The Caprice of Court Morals (Claudia Procula) (Volume 2)

By Claudia Procula

Lambbooks. Paperback. Condition: New. 124 pages. Dimensions: 8.5in. x 5.5in. x 0.3in. Hail, Ennius! Hail, Florus Tullius Cornelius! Hail, Marcus Heracleus Flavius! When did you come back The day before yesterday, at dawn, exhausted. You, exhausted You are never in a sweat! Dont jeer at me, Florus Tullius Cornelius. I am drudging even now on behalf of my friends! Your friends We did not ask you to drudge But my love thinks of you. You cruel people who sneer at me, see this procession of slaves laden with goods Others have gone before them with other goods. And its all to honour you. So this is your work A banquet Why Sh! Noble patricians making such a terrible din! You sound like the plebeans of this country where we are wearing ourselves out in. . . . Orgies and idleness. Because we do nothing else. Why are we here To be bored to death. To teach the hired female mourners here how to live. And. . . to sow Rome in the sacred pelvises of Jewish women. And to enjoy, here as anywhere else, our wealth and power, to which everything is allowed. But for some time a fog has been hanging...
