Excerpt from Facts Disclosed in Some Unreported Cases: Published for the Public Good, by a Victim On the first Wednesday after the great vacations, the French Parliaments held a full session. The deficiencies in the administration of justice, and particularly in the course of business, were then discussed, and measures were taken for correcting such of those evils as were then apparent. The first President and the Crown Advocate were alternately bound to report to the meeting. From the day of assembling, their speeches were called mercurials - this name was also given to a reproof or rebuke - because the members on this day received their reprimands. This was a sort of periodical moral purification. Here, after the rising of the Court, we are content with opening the windows and admitting fresh air.
